

Lyman Allyn Museum is 77 years old and is committed to reaching out to the community in significant ways.

The museum has art classes for adults and children. More than half of the children are on scholarships.

We have docent guided tours for all kinds of audiences and age groups; children, art groups, tourists and retirees.

We coordinate exhibits to school curricula. We raise money each year for the Yellow Bus Fund so that no school system has to worry about unfunded transportation. The children have a tour and hands on activities during a visit.

We have just started an after school program for New London students to provide a meaningful experience in the arts.

We present exhibits that highlight the diversity in southeastern Connecticut.

We encourage local organizations to have meetings in our building.

We want the community to feel this is their museum and their place.

We hope you will support our request.
