Good morning, Senator Slossberg, Representative Spallone and esteemed members of the Government Administration and Elections Committee. Thank you for the opportunity to give testimony today on some very important proposed bills. My name is Tesha Imperati and I represent the Connecticut Family Support Council and I am the South Central Regional Coordinator for the Connecticut Family Support Network. I am also the parent of a child with a special health care need.

H.B. No. 6375 would eliminate the Connecticut Family Support Council as an unnecessary and obsolete entity. I am here to tell you that the Family Support Council is anything but unnecessary or obsolete. In fact, over the past ten years without the benefit of a budget allocation since its inception, the Council has become a major state resource to state lawmakers, families and many state agencies that are otherwise at a loss to determine how best to support families. The Family Support Council has steadily improved the knowledge and understanding among lawmakers of what families raising children with disabilities and complex medical conditions are experiencing. We have identified shortcomings in state systems, the insurance industry and health care services. We have also developed dynamic remedies for many of those solutions. For example, Council members collaborated in pursuing federal grants to establish a coordinated network across the state to provide information, support and education to Connecticut families caring for a child with special health care needs. Today that network, the Family Support Network, employs six coordinators in six regions around our state serving hundreds of families each year as well as supporting and guiding the case work of the Departments of Children and Families, Developmental Services, Public Health and Social Services. Without the network, there would be a great void in the care of children with special health care needs. The Family Support Council is made up of family members of children with special health care needs and state agencies. We represent a vital collaboration that truly works to improve the lives of Connecticut citizens. To eliminate the Council would be to walk away from a valuable resource. It would also be a great disservice to the members who have worked so diligently to improve systems and give hope to so many families of our state. I urge you to preserve the Family Support Council as a necessary and, unfortunately, far from obsolete state entity.

Also in H.B. No. 6375 the Commission on Children would be eliminated. The Commission is a member of the Family Support Council and has been a very active and dedicated resource for the work we do. There is no other resource like the Commission on Children in the state. Their ability to conduct rapid and thorough research keeps all of Connecticut informed about the circumstances of children and families as well as cutting edge solutions to problems families face. The Commission on Children has provided significant resources on bullying, obesity, violence and health care when those issues were only starting to be recognized for the problems they represent in children's lives. Just last week the Commission sponsored an event on President Obama's stimulus package that identified enormous opportunities for funding to the state of Connecticut. I do appreciate that we are in very difficult economic times, but these are the times that children are most at risk, especially children with disabilities or complex medical conditions. Losing the Commission on Children would not represent a savings in the budget. It would represent a loss of a critical resource and a connection to a great many other resources we can not do without at this time. I urge you to preserve the Commission on Children.

Next I would like to turn your attention to S. B. No. 839 and S. B. No. 840, specifically in the proposal to eliminate the Offices of the Child Advocate and the Health Care Advocate. Both of those agencies have been dedicated partners with the Family Support Council. In addition to the work they have done for individual families in need of assistance, like the Commission on Children their staff have been remarkably helpful to our members in carrying out our mission. They provide up-to-date information about state and federal policy and help us tremendously translating information directly to families. The Family Support Network regional coordinators are reporting record numbers of calls for assistance in dealing with health insurance claims or unresponsive state services. At the March meeting of the Family Support Council a Network coordinator expressed the fear that if the Health Care Advocate of Child Advocate were to be eliminated, she would not have anyone to call for help with these families. It is crucial that these agencies remain viable and most importantly independent to ensure their ability to maintain objectivity and freedom to examine complaints when children are not served as they should be. Furthermore, these two agencies do their work with a great deal of expertise, not only in the fields of child welfare, juvenile justice and health care and but also in the laws, ethics and standards that drive those fields and in the investigational techniques required to get fair and accurate accounting of the facts. Children with disabilities or complex medical conditions are at great risk for neglect from caregivers and public systems. Most people intend to be helpful but we find over and over again that they either just do not understand children with special health care needs or they are at a loss themselves for lack of resources to offer. Subsequently, families find themselves in dire circumstances and only the independent Advocates have the access and authority to bring people together to work out solutions. I urge you to preserve the Office of the Child Advocate and the Health Care Advocate.

I am currently working with a family to help them get their little boy home from the hospital. He is a three year medically complex child. He has lived his whole life in a hospital. For the first time in his life he is able to go home, but he cannot. The parents private insurance will not pay for home care, without homecare the child can not go home. The parents have reached out to me guidance and help. Myself along with the Office of the Child Advocate and the Office of the Health Care Advocate and also with several state agencies that sit on the Family Support Council are all working together to help this family get their little boy home.

Thank you for your time and attention. I certainly appreciate the grave challenge before you but I promise you that the Family Support Council, the Commission on Children, the Office of the Child Advocate and the Office of the Health Care Advocate are all agencies that cost the state little and represent significant resources and even savings for the state of Connecticut.
