

3-8-11

I feel that without proper licensing, the state agencies cannot police the improper practices of contractors. During this tough economic time the state is trying to find ways to balance their budget and how much money is the state losing to contractors who are doing work without being licensed? Is it fair to workers who are required to be licensed and the state that allows unlicensed contractors many whom do not live in Connecticut to work without a license? Contractors who come from outside of Connecticut receive payments for their services and then return to their state to spend their money outside of Connecticut which takes tax money away from the state.

Thank you,

Jonathon Pringle