

The industry that produces and promotes the use of genetically-modified crops is disingenuous when it claims that scientific proof of the dangers inherent in such products does not exist. I am sure that many of the people who appear before you to support this bill will provide extensive evidence to the contrary. I want only to comment on the spread of GMO labelling requirements in places where the chemical lobby is not so successful as it is here in the US. We can point not simply to all of Europe and other places where an intelligent response to the science might be expected; but even China of all places acknowledges the dangers and requires labelling.
