

Hello,

I am a lifelong Connecticut resident and an active citizen interested in outdoor environmental and firearm rights issues. I recently found out about the push to allow hunting on Sundays on private property. This is a terrible idea that I cannot support. Sunday is the only day of the week during hunting season that I can feel comfortable going out for a walk in the woods without having to worry about someone with a hunting license (who hasn't had training in decades!) accidentally firing at me or my dog because I sounded like a deer. Adding one more day of hunting won't lead to a magnificent economic recovery, anyone who is remotely interested in hunting already owns their gear and has their licenses. The Sunday ban prevents no one from enjoying their sport the majority of the week. Give us one day of sanctuary to go for a simple walk in the woods without worrying about an accident delivered via rifle round.

Thank You,

Scott Drouin
