

We have an outdoor wood burning furnace on our dairy farm that provides all of our hot water year around. We currently do not have any other means of making hot water since the furnace does it all. It would cost us a lot of money to go back to electric hot water for our large two family house with 13 family members using it and to refit our oil fired heater in the barn for all the hot water we need to milk and clean equipment twice a day. Local landscapers keep us supplied with free wood they are cleaning up and need to dispose of. The Eastford town crew brought us wood a couple days ago. Since milk prices are headed downhill again, spending extra money for hot water would be an unnecessary added expense to an already strained budget. Please do not put more restrictions on our use of probably one of the best money saving devices we have. Thank you.
