

To Whom It May Concern:

Inclusion Team has shown me the importance of communication diversity. Communication is important in building relationships on a personal level as well as in the classroom or work place.

When you don't understand someone you tend to avoid or ignore the situation. Some people have ideas and don't know how to communicate with others. Inclusion is not only teaching me how to enhance my own communication skills but how others communicate. People communicate verbally, physically, and emotionally. The way you speak, act, and feel are apart of your communication skills.

With communication you can interact with everyone. Understanding all aspects of communication open doors to new ideas and other opportunities because it allows you to work with people. You become open to others opinions and ideas.

I believe this makes me a better leader because communication is the way to help others. I feel more confident asking questions rather than making assumptions. Everyone has something different to offer and a lack of communication skills make it harder to understand their intentions. Inclusion Team makes this easier through exposure of the existing diversity in communication, teaching students to be open minded and understanding of differences.
