

In regards to the legislation that is on the table in regards to bundling Hunting and Boating online I think that is completely outlandish to think that fire arms training actually be done in any form online. While the cost effectiveness of such courses may have some financial merit behind it the cost to the general public will have no merit. Certain things have to have a hands on training, and I am sure that there will be overwhelming opposition to this in regards to the lack of anything useful or beneficial in making those online courses.

I speak for myself and family in saying this is in no way a good idea. Please see to it that this is not something that can pass.

Michael Fanning
mfan616@optimum.net