

I recently found out about the bundled bill to allow online training for boating and firearms.

I was trained in firearms as a young teen and I'm horrified that anyone thinks it is not something that needs hands on lessons. There are a lot of mechanics & quirks to learning to use and care for weapons that a new gun/bow user needs to learn. The risk and the consequences of learning those in an unstructured environment are just too high.

Tying this to online boating education is also really odd. Both of those licenses should require a hands on component.

Thank you for your consideration-
