

Hi

I hope the list of "proposals" is not the main event for gun control. We need to go much further than this if we are going to have an effect on gun violence. I have no issues with them, other than they are not enough. I know that Wednesday is lobby day, so for my part, please support what Malloy has on the plate, and consider the ammunition tax idea. We need to pass the cost of gun violence from the general public back to gun owners. A tax would be sort of a mandatory insurance policy. Also consider making a requirement that ammunition be sold only face to face.

I have asked the national folks to include a prohibition to internet sales of guns and ammunition in their gun trafficking bill. I think this is only the beginning, and we will have to wait for 2014 to make real progress in congress.
