Putting tolls on the borders of our State is a peculiarly bad idea. As someone who lives near the border with New York, my family would be especially hard hit. I routinely cross the State border a couple of times per week. There are many who live in Connecticut and work in New York State that would be even more adversely affected. Of course, we will all find alternative routes on secondary roads to get around the tolls, but that will increase the congestion on those roads and slow our travel. The projected revenues will fall short.

Connecticut is becoming a less and less attractive place to live because of ever increasing taxes and poor Government policies. This idea will make our State situation even worse. We need to look to the spending side of the budget and stop harassing our people.

Respectfully,
