To Whom it my concern

My Mother passed 7 years ago from Alzheimer's she was 87. She was in a nursing home for her last 9 years and the last 7 she spent in a wheelchair with out knowing any of her family not even me. My Mother was a prim and proper women and I can remember her saying to me don't let me live like that. Even though I was her power of attorney there was nothing I could do but watch her get worse and worse until the good lord took her. After visiting her at least two or three times a week I would come home and pray for the good lord to take her. I believe if someone is terminal and has a living will or they are of sound mind and wish not to go through all the suffering and would like to have Physician-Assisted Suicide I believe it should be allowed. I know this is much different but we do it for our pets because we love them so much we don't want to see them suffer. Again I believe Physician-Assisted Suicide should be allowed.

Thank you
