Gas tax revenues should be used for their intended purpose to maintain and repair roads and bridges. Where do politicians get the right to spend revenues as they please? This is another example of why politicians have such a low approval rating. Many jobs could be generated for unemployed Connecticut workers. One, of many, obvious budget items that could be reduced to save money is "Streetscape" grants. The State gives money to towns to make their streets look pretty but let the roads and bridges go into disrepair which people must drive on to see the pretty streets. Does that make any sense?
