

Keno gambling is a bad idea for raising state funds. It facilitates addictive behavior. There are plenty of avenues for gambling, so there is no libertarian right being infringed if the State does not permit Keno.

In my view, such bills show a total lack of the sense of the "public good." Considering the cost of anti-social behavior to the State budget, I find it disturbing that these special interest bills actually get to the floor.

In no way is the projected revenue to the State compensate for the costs to society. It is incumbent upon those who support these bills to prove that there is a public purpose to such legislation.
