A friend of mine developed pancreatic cancer several years ago and has passed away. In his last few months of life each morning when he woke-up he became upset because he hadn't died during the night and had to face another day of suffering and wasting away in front of his friends and family. He should have had a choice to die in a humanitarian way.

I also question why: Abortion is legal in America - taking the life of an unborn - but taking one's own life is not? Personally, I think a woman should have a right to choose. And I also believe someone has a right to choose when to end their life in a dignified way.
