

I am sure there was a reason for getting rid of tolls in CT in the first place. Second as a person living in Western CT I am concerned that a border toll would be another reason for more people to leave the state. Little by little the tangible benefit of living here and commuting to NY has been eroding this could just be the last straw. Especially when NY is actively campaigning for people to move back. We may see some revenue from out of state motorists but anyone that makes the trip on a regular basis like truckers would find a way to avoid the state altogether to get to MA or NY , they would just go a little further west and any business near the boarder that provide services to these people would be the loser, causing them to close up shop , adding to the already known problem of people leaving the state.

Thank you for your time
