

I know that the state's economic picture is not very good; however, introducing Keno to help solve the problem is not a reasonable alternative.

This undoubtedly will place a heavy burden on lower income families trying to gamble their way out of debt. The probable result is that these individuals and families will likely be in greater financial stress which ultimately becomes the state's problem through more spent on social programs.

I can not emphasize enough my opposition to adding Keno in Connecticut.

Regards,

John Kuzia