

I am writing to add my name to the list of supporters of end of life choice and to express to the legislature my hope that they will change the law to allow people the full range of options and control over their own deaths, including physician assistance.

For those who contend that palliative is adequate, they should avail themselves of that option. The insidious intrusion of church and religion into this issue is a violation of the required separation of church and state. Individuals are free to allow their faith to shape their end of life decisions, but not mine and not others.

I own my life. If I am ever faced with this choice, I want the law to assert and protect my right and freedom to self determination.

Sincerely,
