Subject: Right to die with dignity

I strongly support the Connecticut Right to Die Legislation which, hopefully, will be proposed. Under the U.S. Constitution it clearly implies we have the right of free choice as long as our choices do not impinge on the rights and freedom of others. We live in the 'Constitution' state. Isn't that ironic. As the law stands now, my freedom is denied. I do not have the option for a physician's assisted death. However, those who oppose this legislation do have their right to die as they wish. How is this fair to me?

Even if I would choose not to avail myself of the option, the knowledge that I could, would be a great comfort to me, as it would be to others. Palliative care can only reduce physical pain not psychological torment. The Hospice Care opposition is obviously the reaction of a vested interest. I should not be told by others (including the Catholic church) how I will die.

In summary, my point is: the opposition should be able to make their choose and so should I.
