

I sincerely hope there will not be an approval for reinstating tolls. Our gas taxes, etc. are high enough as it is. The cost of living in Connecticut is driving residents & businesses away. And once again, residents would be "dinged" for more money, the degree to which would be governed by their location and/or their work commute.

Additionally, tolls would just bring back the probability of more accidents & greater congestion along stretches of highway. Unless the nation adopts a universal SpeedPass requirement.

How about a fairer income tax to better support our budget for road repairs, with wealthier folks paying a more proportionally equal rate to what others pay. Cut out the tax breaks that unfairly benefit the rich, and exorbitant salaries for upper level politicians, as well. Perhaps some "creative" thinking can better solve the issue of needing tolls.
