

I write in opposition to this proposal. I own property in Vermont and Connecticut , so I commute frequently between the two states. I don't see why I should have to pay this impost each commute as I would have to if it became law. Connecticut taxes gasoline, and that should be the source of any infrastructure funding the state requires. We all know that any revenue from these tolls will go straight into the general fund to be used to inflate the already excessive state budget, instead of being used to improve the highways. The gas tax is already being wasted in this way.

Where is the money to be found to build these toll stations? That's a major expense in itself.
