

Darlene Cardonita
onedar@sbcglobal.net
Branford, Connecticut 06405

First and foremost, it's the right thing to do. Many seniors including myself have worked and are still working to make ends meet. Many states already have the consideration to respect their seniors and allow them to get the full benefit of social security income. I started working the day I turned 16 and haven't stopped working yet. My husband is disabled, so the burden falls to me to keep us financially viable. If Connecticut doesn't ease-up on taxes for seniors then my only option is to leave Connecticut once I leave the workforce. I simply cannot survive In Connecticut on just Social Security income. It's way overdue to allow your senior citizens who have given so much to Connecticut to breath a little sigh of relief. I am angry and frustrated over Governor Malloy's tax and spend attitude. I am glad I wasn't one of the voters responsible for putting him in office.