I agree that the personal income tax on social security benefits should be eliminated. In most cases, people receiving social security are on a tight, fixed and shrinking income. To have a tax placed on income that someone has paid into their whole lives (and was forced to pay into by the government) is wrong. The elderly have enough to worry about what with rising health care and cost of day to day living increasing every year.

Connecticut taxing their way into a state that nobody wants to live in. Start competing with other low-tax/no-tax states and watch people stay in the state & keep their money working here in Connecticut.
