Retirees on fixed incomes have been struggling to meet the ever increasing tax burden imposed by the State of Connecticut. Many have or plan to abandon Connecticut for states that do not tax Social Security income. Only 12 states, besides Connecticut, impose a tax on Social Security income: Colorado, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Dakota, Rhode Island, Utah, Vermont and West Virginia; that leaves 37 States retirees have to choose from when looking for a lower cost place to live. In addition, there are 12 States that do not tax retirement income of any kind; they are: Alabama, Alaska, Florida, Mississippi, Nevada, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Washington and Wyoming. Young people cannot afford to live in Connecticut. Old people cannot afford to live in Connecticut. Businesses cannot afford to operate in Connecticut. Time to do something that will change this situation before its too late.
