As a life long resident, I never thought that the State would be the one trying to drive me out. My wife and I will soon be living on a fixed income and Social Security will a major part, along with investments, of that income. The fact that the State wants to dip their fingers into the funds that we have set aside for our retirement is a crime. Where do certain parties get off with the idea of middle class people not paying our fair share. How about telling the people they want to give the money I worked for to get off their backside and go work for their own money. If the real estate market was better, I would be looking at NH, TN or FL, but no one wants to move in.
