As a senior, any relief that can be had by the elimination of a tax is appreciated. From my perspective social security represents a portion of our yearly income, which means we still pay state income tax on my wife's wages and our investments. These combined with the sales tax, property taxes and federal taxes makes one wonder who they are working for, and there seems to be little in return for the monies paid. It's difficult to think that anyone could live comfortably on social security alone and taxing it just makes it more difficult.
