

robert mcnamara
bobmcnam@gmail.com
guilford, Connecticut 06437

all you have to do is fly down to Florida and spend a few days. The dramatic difference in the economy is staggering. Almost every person you talk to down there is relocating for six months a year to gain residency. Where are they from? High taxing States with CT leading the list. Cost per watt for electric is half of what it is in CT. Where are they going? States with No income tax, estate tax and low property taxes and low utility cost. Cost per watt for electric in FL is half of what it is in CT. When you leave Florida go to New Hampshire. No sales tax, no income tax. Its booming! Buildings going up everywhere, new highway entrances, low property taxes. As a new retiree the thought of paying taxes on my hard earned SS and 401 k distributions is going to send me packing. What this administration doesn't seem to understand is having growth and companies moving into the State instead of leaving the state brings in people, increases property values, brings in businesses to support those people. All of these items generate more taxes. I own a number of commercial buildings and other Real Estate and none of these have appreciated a dime in fifteen years. They are all for sale because finding tenants to fill them is impossible. What Ct leaders don't understand is instead of losing companies like GE, the smart states are offering incentives to companies. Because all of their employees, buy houses (and pay taxes), pay income taxes and consume items that require sales tax. Seems like a "no-brainer" to me.