I believe that the decision to move to Hartford was one between the former Mayor of Hartford and the former "Rock Cats" baseball team. Watching the news during the decision to build the stadium, it seemed as though the majority of the public opposed the idea. The former Mayor seemed as though he was pushing it through despite opposition. I thought that the stadium in New Britain was fine and enjoyed going to the games there. According to the former Mayor, funds were already in place for this and it would not require additional funding. If this is a poor business decision between the Mayor and the team, why is the State of Connecticut being requested to provide funding? The State is already in crisis with its budget. I would rather have certain programs funded that affect people through out Connecticut than build a stadium to support a poor decision by a former Mayor.
