

I live in Middletown on route 217, a road where the 35 mile peed limit is ignored, but more importantly where many people try to enjoy walking. Since 217 is very narrow in spots and implies that passing is acceptable by showing broken yellow lines at various places. At the very least I would hope that the state could widen the road and create a safer walking space. Since living on route 217 aka East St I have seen many animals killed by speeding cars. Since many people walk along route 217 it is my hope that I don't have to witness a person being hit by a vehicle. Many years ago a man was killed on route 217 while getting his mail at his mail box which was on the other side of route 217. I appreciate your review of this potentially hazardous situation.

Sincerely,
Robert Barron
