Hello,

I live in New Haven, CT and I am in opposition to SB 359.

Data disaggregation is a particularly important facet to data analysis. Disaggregating information can help institutions and organizations cater programs to specific populations better.

As a PhD student at Yale University, I have found that disaggregated data is crucial to my work on Southeast Asians within the broader field of Asian American Studies, which tends to obscure the specificities of ethnic group under the umbrella of Asian America.

I sincerely hope you take this into account, and the ways in which anti-data disaggregation continues to marginalize already vulnerable populations.

Please let me know if you have further questions.

Best,
Jacinda Tran
