

Dear Environment Committee members,

This is a densely populated state between two major international cities. Banning frack waste is absolutely appropriate since the businesses who run these operations once established in an area know full well that oversight is not constant; which will allow them to slip unlisted chemicals into their waste to be dumped. An unspoken common practice. Corporate reliance on "citizen clean" up as part of their business model has had a long history. For the sake of public health and the fragile New England ecosystems, this is not business we need.

Sincerely yours,

Dr. Gale E. Ridge
