

NPV is a very bad idea. Under the NPV legislation being considered, Connecticut's sovereignty as a state is diminished, the popular vote of a Connecticut citizen is diminished.

Our Founders carefully and deliberatively considered a national popular vote, and overwhelming rejected direct democracy as the means to elect the President of the republic. These were learned men, aware of the lessons history had to offer from the downfall of Greece, the Roman Empire, and through the Enlightenment.

Their wisdom should not be rejected because rule of law that has served us through 45 peaceful transitions of power seems antiquated because one political party is unhappy, again. Self government is not easy, and if you believe direct democracy is good, I suggest you Google the French Revolution and see how that turned out. Germany, 1930's, same thing.
Thank you for your consideration.
Heidi Clifford