

To switch from present system to follow the national popular vote winner is a poor idea. The present system is there to protect small states from a dictation of the majority i.e. the big states. Why would any national candidate pay any attention to Connecticut under a popular vote system? The big states would sweep us aside and dictate the result.

Richard Loyer