

I read the proposal regarding the changes to the State Water Plan with regard to wells. I oppose changing the wording in the existing State Water Plan. How can you possibly determine where the water comes from when it is in public wells. Water, as we know, finds it's own way. How can you justify protecting water from all sources, other than wells? Water is consumed by all people, it is necessary to sustain life. How can you justify protecting residents who consume water from public sources and, in the same sentence, decide that residents who consume water from private wells do not deserve the same protection? We are all residents of Connecticut who consume water from all sources in a bid to sustain life. I find your proposal disturbing. It brings to mind the problem that Michigan created with the public water supply and not protecting it. Are we destined for the same fate? Some of us are "deserving of the State's protection" while others are not?
