

To Whom it May Concern,

I am against an Assisted Suicide Bill. The right to end life belongs to God alone. Everyone has their designated time where their life will end on this earth. We cannot interfere with that plan. People need to turn to God in their suffering. Suffering brings us closer to God and others. Suffering people need to be taken care of not terminated.

How can we possibly determine when someone's life is no longer worth their suffering? How can we avoid negligence: someone's life being ended against their will, but they do not have the ability to voice their desire to live? How can we say someone who is suffering is of more value than those who are not suffering?

We have no right to take another human being's life. Nor do they have the right to take their own God-given life. It is for God alone to decide.
