Issue

Identify the states where recreational marijuana is subject to state and local taxes and describe how the taxes are structured. This report has been updated by OLR Report 2020-R-0019.

Recreational Marijuana Taxes

Eight states impose excise taxes on recreational marijuana sales. Attachment 1 shows each state's marijuana tax rate and base, the entity subject to the tax, and any additional state and local taxes that apply to recreational marijuana sales.

The marijuana excise taxes are based on the product's weight or its price or value. Alaska and California impose flat, weight-based taxes that depend on the part of the plant being sold (e.g., flowers or leaves). The six other states and California tax impose taxes based on a percentage of the product's retail sales price or wholesale value. Nevada, for instance, applies a 15% tax on the marijuana's fair market value at wholesale (determined by its Department of Taxation). Oregon applies a 17% tax on the product's retail sales price.

The taxes apply at either the wholesale (Alaska) or retail (Massachusetts, Maine, Oregon, and Washington) level. California, Colorado, and Nevada apply different taxes to each respective level.

Excise Tax vs. Sales Tax

Excise taxes are taxes imposed on specific goods, such as gasoline or tobacco. They can either be per-unit taxes (e.g., per gallon of gasoline) or ad valorem taxes (e.g., percentage of wholesale price of tobacco products). They are often imposed at the wholesale level, and passed along to consumers as part of the final price.

Sales taxes, on the other hand, apply to most retail purchases, with certain exceptions. They are generally calculated as a percentage of the purchase price and paid by the consumer to the retailer.

In half of the states (California, Massachusetts, Nevada, and Washington), recreational marijuana is also subject to the state's general sales tax. (It is exempt from sales tax in Colorado and Maine; Alaska and Oregon do not impose a state sales tax.)

Additional local taxes apply in all of the states except Maine. Local marijuana excise taxes may apply in municipalities in Alaska, Colorado, Massachusetts, and Oregon. Additional local sales taxes may apply in Alaska, California, Colorado, Nevada, and Washington in jurisdictions imposing such taxes.
