

Bill 457 and Bill 738

I think it is absolutely crazy to force school regionalization.

One may save on the cost of the leading superintendent, at the same time having multiple assistant superintendents not now needed.

Negotiations with unions would be more concentrated, and less capable for individual town residents to be heard.

Decisions on local school health care plans makes much more sense than having it more central design.

There has been no solid reason I've seen why forced regionalization makes sense. If some towns want to do that, no problem, but it should be up to the towns themselves.

Sincerely yours,
