

The idea of forced school regionalization is not a good one. Local taxes support local school systems, and individual towns that pay a higher tax percentage should not be forced to pay for other towns education. Keep education local, where our administration, school board, faculty and staff know our children. Schools are the heart of a community, we want our communities to remain central to our individual district needs. It is unrealistic that a Superintendent can grasp several different towns management style. Forced regionalization will force all towns to maintain subpar administration. Do not remove local school control from individual towns . Town district management works because residents care about the heart of their community, remove the personal touch and individual needs of towns and you are creating a system where people, teachers and staff are distanced and careless about children.

Thank you,
Jeff Blumberger