

Regionalizing schools is a terrible idea. It would do away with small classes, which really help students learn, it would put students on busses for very long periods of time and it would do away with the special individual help that so many children require today. These are just a few of the reasons why regionalization is a bad idea for our children. How about cutting costs by having less administrators in each school and sharing more teachers between towns? Some ideas to really think about!

Barbara J. Reeve
Retired Teacher