

Bill 457 and 738

Asking towns to consolidate on special needs children would do a tremendous help for smaller towns. Anything of that nature would be fantastic. But forcing towns who are of varying strengths and socioeconomic backgrounds to ignore the weaknesses of one town violates the American aspiration for a better life for its children. Not all towns have the same attitude toward education. At least put like towns together. Resentment comes from mismatching. Don't use just geography as a basis. Most of us move to a town based on the educational system.

Liz Tuttle

North Haven