

Would like to put my statement on the record for the hearing on this issue on February 7, 2019:

The Freedom of Religion clause in the United States Constitution guarantees that an American citizen has the right, according to the law to practice his religion. Adhering to ones's religious practices such as not ingesting or being administered synthetic medicines is protected under this clause. No state should override the constitutional rights of its citizens.

Sincerely;

Magaret A Soto
Newtown, CT