

In the mid 1980s my grandmother, age 86, was having a mild heart attack. Her doctor??? (if you can call him that) told me "at her age there is no sense putting her in the hospital, you can take her home. I got mad at him and he sent her to the hospital. She survived 4 more years and was not bedridden until her last weekend. She died on a Monday at age 90 years.

There is a dangerous mindset with some people as far as what is quality of life. Who are these people to decide? They also convince elderly and disabled that they are a burden and should give up. Be a good gal or guy. Here I will give you some pills. This is part of the dangerous and erroneous mindset that would kill human beings. Save the coyotes. Kill the humans.
