I am very close to an adoptee, a friend of my daughter's since pre school. Suzanne, who has wonderful adopted parents, still wanted her birth records to know her birth parents and to learn her genetic background. She was successful as the resident of a neighboring state. But for those who live in Connecticut and seek DNA information that can change their life outcome, we need to allow adoptees to identify their birth parents. I see no reason for denying this access in our state.
