

I am writing because I am a single parent who is fighting on a weekly basis to get her ex spouse to pay what he is supposed to. He decided to take 8 months out of work after the finalization of the divorce just so he would not have to own up to his responsibilities. Apparently he is back to work and his support is supposed to be take out of his checks and yet I am still receiveing compensation sporadically. When I do call my support worker I seem to get a phone call either a week later or one that states because he sent at least one payment within a month he is keeping up with his responsibility. I have lost so much because of what he did during our marriage and now my two girls and I are soon going to be without a home because I am in the process of losing it due to him and his lack of payments. I do work full time so I am luckier than most and cannot imagine ones that live strickly on child support. Reform and accountability needs to be increased and enforced for these deliquent parents!

Anonymous