

Dear CAGV,

I'm very much appreciating your work. I'm not an American citizen, but right now I live in this country. Regardless of citizenship I am concerned about this matter, because as long as violence happens it does not matter on which land it happened. We are people and we are here to take care of each other.

Here is my point why I am against people being able to buy guns without any restriction (I am actually against anybody having any gun, but that's another matter): Governments say they want to protect their citizens, right? So for this reason they take actions against cigarette companies. Alcohol distribution. Drugs are illegal so that people can not harm themselves with them. How can then guns be legal when their sole purpose is for one man to harm another one?

Hope my English was good enough to express my point.
Keep up the good work, I hope you will succeed!
