

January 28th, 2013

To Whom It May Concern,

I believe in second amendment rights; the rights of Americans to bear arms for hunting and recreational shooting. I also believe there is a natural difference between guns we allow to legally circulate for civilian use, and military weapons that are confined to our military personnel to be used only in a calculated situations where honorable (and trained) men and women are tasked by an ordered and managed hierarchy to protect fellow Americans from harms way. As the landscape of gun ownership and types of weapons available to the public broadens, Americans have the right and duty to come together to decide on what types of guns should be allowed in our midst. In the aftermath of the outrageous loss of life that have resulted in the use of semi-automatic and multiple round artillery, it is clear that these are not and should not be civilian owned machines and ammunitions. They are military weapons designed for the sole use to take human life as quickly as possible, and they should be confined to the military. This does not encroach on the right to bear arms, but it could do much to prevent massive slaughter on our streets and in our schools; slaughter these machines were designed to create.

Thank you for your efforts and consideration,
Brooke Faison