

I believe that most trails lead to money.

I suggest there be a public display of our politicians who get large sums of money from the NRA for their campaigns and have that list shown in as many publications across the nation.....front page for maximum exposure? For those who are stubbornly ignoring the common sense approach to controlling 'weapons of war' on our streets.....for not wanting background checks and the tracking of gun ownership to be done more the way we track car sales....let them tell us why these responsible measures can't be taken. If money equates a successful run for a government position and the NRA is pushing it's agenda then let's see who is in it's pocket.

I also would like to see that gun owners take 2 tests....one for performance or handling, the other a written test showing they understand the responsibilities and safety measures they need to take on as gun owners. We do this for drivers getting behind the wheel of a car or truck. Why not with guns? I don't buy into the statement that driving is a privilege and gun ownership is a right. It all has to do with common sense and being responsible.

The mental health part of the equation is tougher to manage due to our rights to privacy. Godspeed to those who are tackling that aspect of the problem.
