

Banning high capacity magazines and so called assault weapons is not going to solve anything. Mandatory prison terms, 10 years for first offense to start, is a great way to go. Magazine capacities limited to ten rounds will render a majority of firearms useless, especially with talk of confiscation of magazines.

A bill to limit all guns to firing only one round at a time. Thank god that law was not in effect in Atlanta, Georgia where the mother of two, after retreating deep into her own home, was forced to shoot an intruder with ill intent, 5 times with her revolver. I say she shot him 5 times because she missed him with ONE of the shots. When seconds count, the police are minutes away.

Making all permit holders names public is not a good idea. When people are not at home, the criminal element will be waiting to break into homes to steal firearms. I know the question will arise asking why the guns weren't stored in a safe? Well, if they are stored in a safe and cannot be stolen, who is to say a frustrated criminal won't destroy the inside of the home or kill the homeowners pets. Think about that, please.

Another bill wants a 50% tax on ammo. Who is going to be effected by this?, naturally the law abiding citizen.

With over 20,000 gun laws on the books to this point, I would much rather see enforcement of those than these which are being proposed currently.

I understand that people want action now, well so do the rest of us but lets move in the right direction.
