

I find it a poor policy to react with legislation to emotional circumstances. Accordingly, please proceed carefully and rationally rather than emotionally. There are several things that I believe to be true;

1. It was a terrible tragedy and horrific event due to its scale and the age of the victims
2. Child death happens at an alarming rate in this country and goes unchecked and unmentioned because it is usually not a media event. This has little to do with guns or school safety. More done to address overall child safety would prevent far more tragedy than new gun laws.
3. Enforce the ones you have and adjust them to have them make sense. For example, if background checks are required then they should be required regardless of where they are purchased. If not remove them. Otherwise they serve no purpose.
4. Look at the cause not the instrument. Lack of connection to community whether it is from mental illness, being a social outcast, political disenfranchisement etc. has generally led to a tragic consequences.

Respectfully,
