

I feel that Connecticut has in place already very intelligent and strict gun laws. I agree that the spree shootings are an absolute atrocity and understand the feeling that we need to make sure that nothing like this ever happens in the future!

That being said, putting restrictions on responsible law abiding citizens seems like the most near sighted and fruitless way of accomplishing what needs to happen in Connecticut. We need to enforce the laws already in existence and focus on keeping guns of any kind out of the hands of people who we already know to be criminals.

No amount of legislation will ever bring back those precious children of Newtown or others around the country, BUT blaming responsible citizens and enacting pointless laws will only create more opportunities for criminals to do the unthinkable.

I trust you will hear from all sides and reach a reasonable conclusion that will actually address the societal problems facing us in the 21 century.

Thank you for reading and considering all the options that avail you.

Mark McLean
Coventry, CT

Sent from my iPhone